The struggle is real – and we need you!

Join us for a day of mapping solutions for funding community-based aging services. Ohio's aging population will reach its peak by 2035, while its working-age population contracts. Communities will need to optimize existing, low-cost care settings with just-enough services that maximize older adults' wellness and function, staving off reliance on health systems. The day's agenda focuses on innovations that housing operators have already deployed to secure payment for the services they provided to residents. The day will begin with a high-level view of where aging services is headed and what new practices offer the most promise. On-site service coordination is one solution, and participants will learn how different partnerships have worked—or not worked—to create sustainable funding streams for this vital service. Later in the day, participants will hear about different models that allow healthcare providers to assume full risk for the population they serve—and the cost-effective savings. Don't miss this opportunity to be at the table.

The day's program will be facilitated by:
Michelle Missler, President/CEO
American Association of Service Coordinators

Speakers include:

- Dr. Robyn Stone, Senior Vice President of Research
Co-Director of the LeadingAge Long-Term Services and Supports (LTSS) Center, University of Massachusetts Boston
